A destroyed landscape where many died, that was the result of the fighting in the Hurtgen area.

In the last phase of World War II, German troops tried to stop the Allied march into the Rhineland in the area between Düren and Monschau.

At that time, Germans and Americans died. Victims of a war that had already been lost for millions and won for others. Nothing more was decided here, only extended and suffered.

The memory of the victims, the international understanding and the admonition for peace should be remembered by the walks on historical paths even more than 75 years after the end of the conflict.
